Shared ideas earn shared cash prize

Updated: 06.05.10

Good thinking paid off for a team of competitors from Bellaire High School in the Energy City of the Future 2050 challenge.

The students took second place and will split a cash prize of $800 for their entry in Energy City of the Future 2050, a competition managed by Harris County Department of Education and sponsored by Shell Oil Company.

During the spring semester, students researched alternative forms of energy for 2050 such as solar or wind power for their model energy cities. After building the prototype energy city, students developed PowerPoint presentations and public service announcements.

In-kind supporters were University of Houston, Greater Houston Partnership and Education Foundation of Harris County.
